29/09/2023

14:30:00 - 15:55:00

BACKGROUND

The right to free movement is a fundamental pillar of the European Union (EU). Thus, EU citizens have the right to travel, move, take up work or look for a job within the EU.

The EU provides common rules to protect social security rights of citizens when moving within Europe.

To apply these rules, national institutions have to exchange informations which was being mostly done on paper. As part of the modernization of social security coordination, the basic regulation (EC) No 883/2004 (Title V - Article 78) and its implementing regulation (EC) No 987/2009. (Title V - Article 95) have introduced the obligation of electronic exchange between social security institutions. Thus, any article requiring exchanges between the social security institutions has been modeled and formalized by standardized electronic procedures.

Since July 3rd 2017, 32 countries (EU Member States, United Kingdom, Iceland, Liechtenstein, Norway and Switzerland) are moving towards electronic exchange of information concerning social security benefits for people moving from one country to another. To this end, the social security institutions are deploying the Electronic Exchange of Social Security Information (EESSI).

EESSI is an IT system which connect Member States' institutions in charge of social security for electronic data exchanges. It was developed and it is being maintained by the European Commission pursuant to Regulation (EC) No 883/2004 and its Implementing Regulation (EC) No 987/2009, as last amended by Commission Regulation (EU) No 1372/2013 of 19 December 2013.
